

Retrospective

Thanks to the efforts of Communication Design faculty Barbara Sudick and Frank Armstrong, California State University, Chico will pay tribute next month to the late Paul Rand, the professors' former teacher and world-renowned graphic designer.

About Paul Rand

Rand, who died in 1996 at the age of 82, was one of the pioneers of American graphic design. In a field with little name recognition, Rand nevertheless created symbols almost universally recognized: the familiar corporate logos for companies such as IBM, UPS, Westinghouse, NeXt, and Enron.

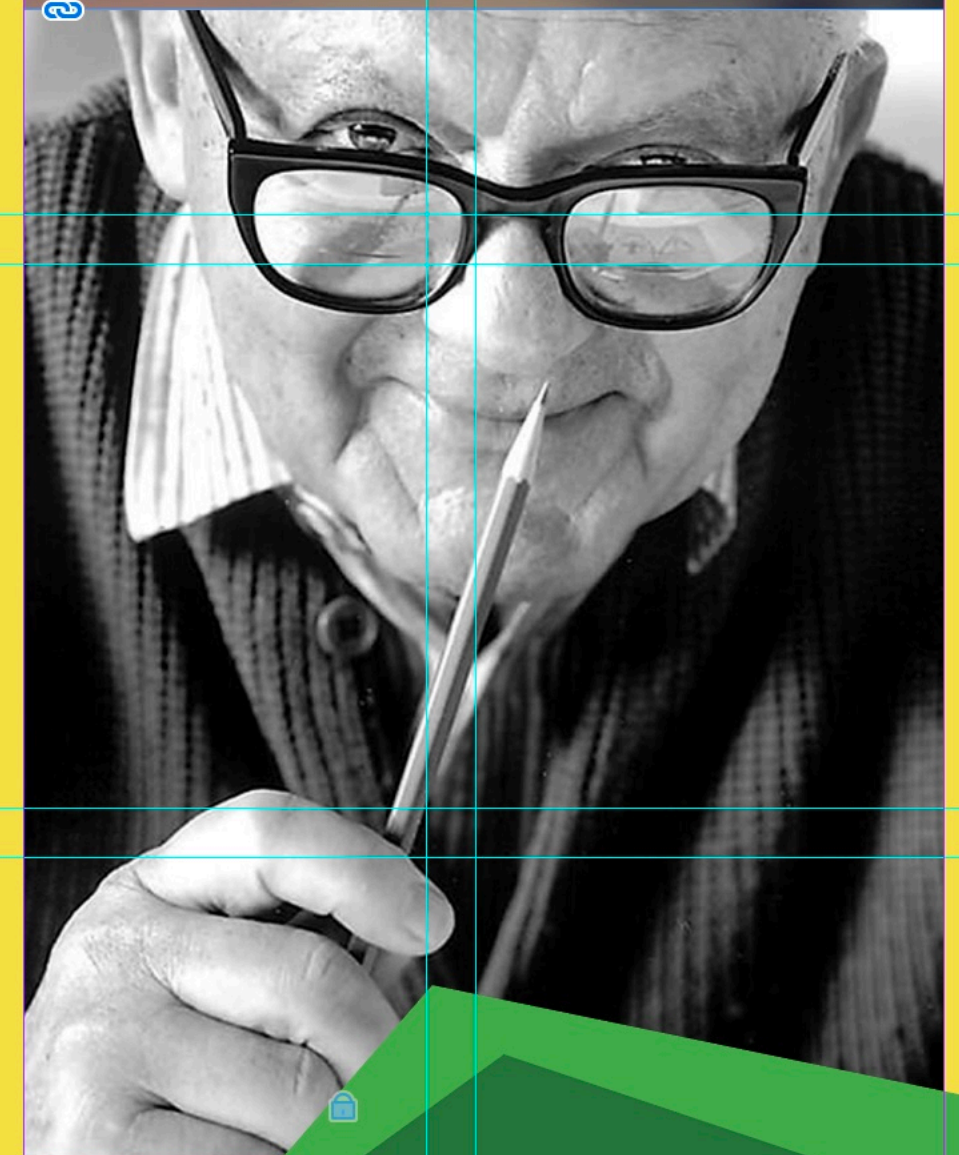

Steeped in European Modernism and equally adept at whimsy and simplicity, Rand was terrifically influential as a designer, illustrator, author, and teacher. "He was the American graphic designer," said Sudick, a graduate student of Rand's at Yale University.

Sudick and her husband, communication design instructor Frank Armstrong, both attended classes with Rand and have written on Rand's importance in American graphic design.

Don't try to be original,
just try to be good.
